TAMPA & JACKSONVILLE RY.

The annual election of officers of the Tampa and Jacksonville Railway Company was held in Gainesville Saturday. The following officers were elected: A. P. Stuckey, of this city, president; A. de Sola Mendes, of Darien, Ga., first vice president; B. W. Blount, Jacksonville, second vice president; F. M. Simonton, of Tampa, secretary; Arthur L. Glass, of Gainesville, general manager. The Sampson City-Gainesville-Fairfield branch of the road did the best business of its history last year, or the fiscal year just closed. It is hoped the road will soon extend its lines, as it enters a rich field and would get a great deal of tonnage. Mr. Glass and Mr. Mendes spent yesterday and today in Ocala, coming down in an automobile and returning this afternoon by train.

SUNDAY AT THE FAIR GROUNDS

Yesterday the crowd on the grounds made one think the fair was actually open. There must have been a thousand people within the enclosure when a Star man visited the grounds at 4 o'clock. A few automobiles took a spin about the track, a number of horses were tried and some motorcycle speed runs entertained the crowd. Several of the midway attractions are on the ground but not yet ready for business. Everything is in readiness as far as the fair management is concerned and there will be no delays. Mr. George K. Robinson the president, and Mr. David S. ## THE DECEMBER AMERICAN

The December issue of the American Magazine has some unusually interesting and seasonable feature, prominent among which is a beautiful short story by William J. Locke, entitled "A Christmas Mystery." There will be widespread joy felt by the readers of this excellent periodical in the reappearance of that mysterious and delightful author, David Grayson, whose "Adventures in Contentment" have endeared him to all lovers of wholesome humor and sentiment. Mr. Grayson commences his "New Adventures in Contentment" with a charming and exquisite Christmas story entitled "A Day of Pleasant Bread."

"The American Woman," by Miss Ida M. Tarbell, appears in its second installment in this issue, and confirms the promise made by the publishers, both as to the interest of the articles themselves, and their importance historically. The third installment of J. K. Turner's astonishing articles on "Barbarous Mexico" is also published in this number, and the confessions of the young telegraph operator continue a remarkable exposure of railroad methods in dealing with this class of their employees.

Another feature is a new chapter of "The Spiritual Unrest," by Ray Stannard Baker, which deals with the work and doctrines of Professor Walter Rauschenbush.

Eugene Wood writes most quantity of New York in "The Wicked City," while fiction of unusual quality is contributed by Olive Higgins Prouty, Ralph Henry Barbour, Herbert J. Winthrop, and Wallace Irwin, whose new Hashimura Togo series is proving a notable contribution to American humor. "Simon the Jester," the new novel by William J. Locke, proves already, by his second installment, that this latest work of the popular novelist is going to be the best he has yet written.

The departments of this magazine grow more interesting with each issue. "Interesting People," "Plays and Players," "The Pilgrim's Scrip," and "The Interpreter's House" make the American Magazine unique among other periodicals.
